

Ireland

AND THE WAR.

THE RECRUITING QUESTION.

The new political restlessness of the Irish League, since the Coalition Government was formed, cannot be seriously interfered with recruiting in rural Ireland. By an official decree, which altogether disregards the party truce, there is—writes our Dublin correspondent—now going on a vigorous reorganizing of the League branches. North, South, East, and West. There is no uncertainty of view among the Redmondian Nationalists and the supporters of opinion is altogether remarkable. While Mr. Redmond is inclined to the belief that it is vital to the political cause that he represents, and endeavours to keep alive his recruiting declarations, and his admonitions, and his political following, other Nationalist leaders of note are denouncing the Coalition and urging the strengthening of the Nationalist organization. In a speech Mr. John Dillon, who is sent to the Clerk of the Laxlow Union, in connection with some threatened provisions by a Scottish Insurance Company, he urges "the vital necessity of maintaining the national organization in full power and activity till an Irish Government takes over the control of Ireland." This large order shows the real mind of Mr. Dillon in the present crisis, and how far he has gone for political truces during the war. It is not at all in keeping with his more careful and cautious in the House of Commons.

The rage of the "Longford Leader," the well-known Midland Nationalist paper which is associated with the name of Mr. J. P. Farrell, M.P., knows no bounds as it denounces Mr. Asquith's indifference to Home Rule and his ready agreement as regards a Coalition for war purposes. The following is worth quoting as a specimen of Mr. Farrell's angry views:— "I am a trusted and prominent member of the Redmondite Party, viz.:

"There is little or no use thinking the facts as they now exist. Under pressure of saving the nation because of the war, the Tory Party has captured the Liberal Government, and from being the minority has become the ruling power in the State. This has occurred without the Liberal Government having lost the support of one man of the majority and kept it in power for the last five years. In defence of a wholly fictitious and unwarlike campaign, Asquith has headed down the Liberal Party, and is no longer the Prime Minister of the country. Instead of ordering out a regiment of artillery and moving the Home Office printing office to the face of the earth, and shooting Lord Northcliffe as the highest danger to the success of the Allied arms that exist in England to-day, he has temporarily trusted to the support of a military bully, and finally wholly surrendered to him.

The following is a sample of the correspondence that one reads in the "Irish Independent" (Nationalist newspaper):— "It is sad to think of it, yet the Irish Party, with the desire, perhaps, to do well still, but with a great termination, with the result, the Home Rule, even for the three-fourths of Ireland, is still but a phantom in the distance. Mr. Redmond had in his dealings with the Whigs during the past years exhibited one-half of the firmness and resolution which he displayed in surmounting the control of the Irish Volunteers. Home Rule has not been secured long before the advent of the present war. All this is over now, but when arrangements are heard (and there are such even within the Irish Party itself) there is no cause for surprise. Such feelings but indicate the failure of the leader and the disappointment of a people."

It will be seen that it is not the war, Home Rule and its change, that are agitating the minds of many Irish Nationalists at this critical time in the Revolution. It is the Irish hand, who, in pursuance of the Party truce, have ceased for the time to talk of politics, and who are doing their best in association with Unionists to stimulate recruiting for the Irish regiment. But the intense diversity of view and action that obtains in the official Home Rule party is remarkable, and cannot prove a drag on the cause of the Irish young Irishmen to join the Colours.

A special commissioner of the "Irish Times" has been travelling Ireland with the heads of the Central Recruiting Council—a civilian enterprise which is doing good work under the aegis of the War Office. The substance of his observations is thus given: "Everywhere the meetings are being attended by representatives of the press and the speakers are listened to with respectful, if not enthusiastic, attention. In some districts the response to the call for recruits for the various Brigades is prompt and generous. In others it is indifferent, and in some districts it can only be described as absolutely bad. Speaking as a whole, responded readily, and the exception of the young men engaged in the several recruiting centres, the great majority of whom are agriculturists, the response to the recruiting class has everywhere been good, and it is of interest to note that the class of the towns who are most stubbornly resisting all appeals to their patriotism are the young men who have come from rural districts."

At a recruiting meeting held at Clonmel, near Dublin, one of the speakers said: "There were counties in Ireland where there were no recruits, and 2,000 men of recruitable age, all of whom were in the ranks of the Army. To revert to the dominant and serious outcome of the present situation has been the suspension of the 'Cork Free Press' as a daily paper, during the continuance of the war. The reason given by the Editor is that Home Rule is for the present dead, and the paper, not being a commercial enterprise, but for the propagation of an ideal, cannot be maintained. All for Ireland" Nationalist of Mr. Wm. O'Brien, it is not necessary to incur the expense of publication until after the war, or until a possible unexpected development may occur more under Home Rule a question of active, practical politics. With respect to the alleged case of Home Rule, the O'Brien conviction is not without interest, viz.:

"There can scarcely be a dozen men of intelligence left in the country who no longer believe in the entire edifice of the 'Wait and See' policy on which the late Home Rule Government was based. The dependents have been labouring for the past five years has crumbled to the earth, and can never be built up again. The fair ship, 'Home Rule,' which, according to Mr. Redmond's own admission, was but a few months ago speeding full speed ahead into the harbour, has been torpedoed by its own captain. A Coalition Government is a coalition in power which does not contain three thorough-paced Home Rulers, but a coalition in which the Home Ruler is a passenger. The Coalition is dissolved, it can only be to go to a General Election, of which who will guarantee the success of the duller of the incapables, the most brazen of the adventurers, who have led the Home Rule cause, and who must realise with quaking hearts that the game is up."

These opinions and views of the time in Ireland may be of very secondary importance to the great events that are proceeding on the Continent, but having regard to the future of the country, they can hardly be ignored by the British public.

Chagford Heroes.

1. Linc-Sergt. J. Brock, 10th Canadian Scottish, was killed in action in France. He resided in Vancouver Island, and joined his Battalion at the outbreak of the war. While with his Battalion at Salisbury Plain he spent two months at Chagford. Before emigrating he was a corporal in the Chagford Detachment of the 5th Devon. His wife, for whom the deepest sympathy is felt, is a native of Chagford. A family of five have lost a brave father. 2. Pte. Arthur Edcott, 2nd Devon, was killed in action in France a fortnight since. He joined the Devons last September, together with Pte. A. Bennett and Pte. H. C. Knight. He will always be fondly remembered as one of Chagford's noble examples of patriotism, and was a favourite in his Company. Pte. Arthur Bennett, 2nd Devon, was reported by his comrades as killed in France. His parents (Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bennetts) were, however, officially notified that he was wounded. Although a month has passed nothing has been heard further, and it should be among the wounded neither his O.C. nor the War Office seem to know to what hospital he was removed. The greatest sympathy is felt for the parents and family in their acute anxiety. He was a smart young soldier, and highly spoken of by his comrades and officers. Pte. H. C. Knight, 2nd Devon, was accidentally disabled by a machine-gun falling on his leg. He is now in hospital at Abingdon (Berkshire). He has been there some time, and, as yet, has no power whatever to use his leg. Hopes of complete recovery are the heartfelt wishes of his many Chagford friends. Photographs by Berry, Honiton.

BRADFORD JOTTINGS.

A letter from a trooper at Cheltenham... The soldier who ends the scores is a fire cracker, and in the piping time of peace has lowered his wicket more than once. He says: 'I have employed the scores for you to see of the match. I am sure you will be glad to have the pleasure of playing on the beautiful pitch again some time in the next future.'

Roll of Honour.

Linc-Corpl. H. L. Paddon, 2nd Devon Regiment, son of M. A. Paddon, Cowick Cottage, Cowick-street, Exeter, killed in action. Deceased was in the Devons for 13 years, and was a good all-round sportsman.
